

TRI NEWS

First I want to remind all of you that on July 29th we will have the 21st year of the Huntington's Disease Triathlon. This is a 100% charity event, and your money will go directly to the research to help find a cure for this inherited degenerative brain disorder. It will be at the Marine Stadium on the Rickenbacker Causeway, and I know several of you will be doing this one. Personally I believe that I have only missed 2 of the 21, as it is a well-run race and for a good cause.

Walt Patten wrote: I did the July 4th Triathlon at Tradewinds Park. The swim was a lot better than I anticipated; the water is an ugly green, but there was no odor or bad taste. We are probably a little spoiled from the great ocean swims. The bike was a little crowded and numerous packs of riders developed. The race results showed a dozen riders were DQ'd - not surprising. The run was a nice two loop course. Overall, it's a good race and a nice way to start out Independence Day.

St. Anthony's - Clearwater, Florida: After canceling the swim several times the past few years, I believe they have solved the rough water problem. The days of "we swim no matter what" are gone. The new swim course hugs the shoreline in a more protected area. The bike and run courses are the same. It's one of the premier races in Florida, and I would recommend it.

Walt placed 1st age group at Tradewinds Park and 6th age group at St. Anthony's.

Eduardo Brandel wrote: My season started later this year, as I started my practices in March, due to personal trips and work. To speed up my practices and have a race target to work on, I signed up for Tri-Miami at Key Biscayne on May 20th. It was a day before my birthday and the best results I ever had in that race. I ended up in 7th place overall and 1st place in my age group. The best birthday gift I could get. :) This result has boosted my energy to train even harder, and on June 17th I raced again at Key Biscayne, Trilogy #1 and finished in 6th place overall and 2nd place in my age group. I am feeling strong now to go even further, and in August I am travelling to Burlington VT to race at Nationals.

When I was younger, I raced for the Brazilian team, but now after years living in the USA, it will be my first time trying to represent Team USA. June 17, Trilogy # 1 Key Biscayne. We had 5 athletes participating.

Char Davidson, 1st age group, Farid Sahari, 9th age group, Christina Weisberg 1st age group and Eduardo Brandel, see above. Mary Nicholls took 1st overall in the Duathlon. Congratulations to all.

TRI AND TRI AGAIN.

I Am A Runner

Ok, we all know I am, and much has been written about what makes a runner a runner, so this is a reminder what makes us runners, as we push through mid-summer's climatic challenges.

I am a runner because:

I enter races.

I race hard.

I race to my limits, which vary week to week, year to year, that I've learned to accept.

I want to race faster.

I like to race out of town, seeing new runners and cities.

I respect and listen to my body.

My weekly runs have structure: track, hills, tempo, long, recovery.

I like how running makes me feel.

I like how running makes me look.

I like how running makes my medical check-ups look good.

I buy shoes based on feel and function, not looks.

I buy apparel based on feel and function, as well as looks.

I sometimes just go out and run and really enjoy it.

I feel some defeat if I need to walk.

I really do plan my diet around running.

All my friends are runners. Sad but true.

I belong to 3 running clubs.

I read many runner magazines.

I own 6 pair of running shoes and wear them all.

I cringed when I worked at the store and someone would ask for Tennis shoes or Sneakers.

I watch TV broadcast of races, including marathons and track events.

Because I can.

I Am A Runner
