Sarasota First Watch Half

On Sunday, March 13, 2016 I race walked the Sarasota First Watch Half Marathon in Sarasota, Florida. It was a little warm as the temperature ranging from 70 to 76 degrees. There was very little wind and mostly sunny skies as the 2129 half marathoners and 170 two person half marathon relayers completed the 13.1 miles over paved roads that were completely closed to traffic. The participants started in downtown went over and back a high causeway to the beach for the first 6.5 miles then went out and back to New College for the remainder of the course. There were plenty of police and volunteers to control the traffic. Water/

Gatorade stations were located from 1.5 to 2.5 miles apart and had plenty of friendly efficient volunteers to take care of the participants. There were many spectators along the course cheering and encouraging the field. The race was well organized and fun as it also was the other two years that I did the event.

Blue Angel Rock & Fly Half Marathon

On Saturday, March 19, 2016 I race walked Blue Angel Rock & Fly Half Marathon in Pensacola, Florida. I really lucked out on the weather as there was an 80 % chance of showers and thunder showers overnight and a 70% chance during the race. In fact the weather has been so rainy for three days that the race director had sent several emails warning that the event might be delayed, shorten, or cancelled if the weather threatened the safety of the participants or volunteers. A final decision would be made at a meeting of military officials at 6:30 AM on race Saturday. When I got up at 6:00 AM I looked at the radar and became elated as the rain and thunder showers had completely cleared through Pensacola overnight and there was no other rain coming throughout the morning. When I arrived at the event at 6:45, the skies were completely clear with almost no wind and a temperature of 70 degrees. During the race the skies remained mostly clear, the wind remained gentle, and the temperature rose to 74 degrees. The course was completely on paved roads in the Pensacola Naval Air Station and as a result military police and other uniformed volunteers kept the participants safe and the course completely clear of traffic. There were 10 water stations along the course that had plenty of efficient friendly volunteers taking care of the needs of the participants. Gatorade was only available at one station near mile 10 and I am not sure of why the race committee planned it that way. I would have preferred to have Gatorade offered at more of the stations. Except for the start and finish area there were very few spectators. Even though there were several participants that fail to show because of the threat of bad weather, there were 805 finishers in the Half Marathon, 445 finishers in the 5K Run, and 137 finishers in the 5K Walk. I enjoyed the event as it was very well organized and fun to do. I had one other unexpected surprise as I was third in my M70-74 Runner Age Group even though I walked the entire half marathon.

Eisenhower Half

On Saturday, April 9, 2016 I race walked the Eisenhower Half Marathon in Abilene, Kansas. It was somewhat cold as the temperature ranged from 36 to 45 degrees while I did the race. The wind was relatively light for the first 6 miles then increased to 10-15 mph with higher gusts for the rest of the race. Water/Gatorade stations were located about every 3/4 of a mile and were manned by plenty of enthusiastic, efficient volunteers. The course went up and down quite a bit; however, nothing was very challenging. The course utilized paved roadways which were completely closed to traffic and had an out and back layout. The event had four races: 5K, 10K, Half Marathon, and Full Marathon with approximately 500 finishers in total. The event starts and finishes near the President Eisenhower Museum and Library. This was my third time at the event: 1 marathon and 2 half marathons. The event is always well organized, friendly, and fun. The Abilene community goes out of their way to welcome the participants and appreciates financial boost to the community and its charities. I had an especially good performance in this half marathon as I finished second in my age group entered as a runner even though I walked the entire way and my time on this certified course was my fastest in the last 57 half marathons that I have completed.
